

Flora Moxon

After studying Archaeology and Medieval History at the University of Southampton, Flora completed a Masters in Archives Management at University College, London. Thereafter, she worked as an Archivist in the Hampshire Records Office, before relocating to Canada where she joined the City of Ottawa's archives team as an Archivist; subsequently, she was appointed as City Archivist.

A family move from Canada to Europe led to a career transition from archives management to human resources management. For the following 25 years, Flora's international HR career enabled her to live and work in Europe, USA, China, and South Africa.

In recent years, she has been UK-based, working with university students as a Career Coach, as well as enjoying active participation in local organisations, including trustee roles.

As a Trustee of the Northumberland Archives Trust, she brings together her enthusiasm for Northumberland's history, her interest in archives, and the diverse experience she has acquired through her career.
