

Roy Jobson

Dr Roy Jobson started his career as a teacher in two secondary schools, followed by a period as a senior officer of an examinations board and then entered education administration serving as Chief Education officer for Manchester and then Director of Education and Children's services for the city of Edinburgh.

Roy was elected as Chair of the Association of Chief Education Officers in England and President of the Association of Education Directors in Scotland.

He was appointed as a visiting professor of education at Manchester University and served as a chairman of an examinations board.

He chaired the organising committee for the National holocaust memorial when it was held in Edinburgh and has been a member of various national boards and committees in both England and Scotland.

He was a governor of the RNCM in Manchester and Herriot Watt university in Edinburgh and is now a member of the Berwick Academy Trust.